

VISITOR VISA - UP TO 180 DAYS

Holders of valid US Passports do not require a visa if they are traveling to Mexico for less than 180 days for tourism.

An entry tax must be paid at the port of entry by those arriving by land or sea. Those entering the country by air will already have paid this tax as part of their airfare. Mexican immigration authorities may ask for proof of solvency (bank statements or a credit card), hotel bookings or your return ticket.

The Mexican Consulate reserves the right not to issue a visa if the requirements are not met or the individual is not considered suitable to be issued a visa.

If the permanent resident card or visa of the United States of America stamped in your passport has expired, but you have documentation or immigration form to prove your legal stay in the United States of America, you must apply for a Mexican visa at this Consulate. Forms I-797 A, Advance Parole, Forms I-20 or DS-2019 are not accepted documents for entry into Mexico.
